symptoms to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), which ultimately lead to an emergency announcement.

Will information be provided immediately to the public in the case of a bioterrorism attack?

The CDC and other healthcare officials must have certain information before they can inform the public about what to do. Public health officials must first identify the biological agent, the appropriate treatment and those at risk.

Checking the television, radio and Internet regularly for official updates is advised to find out if you are in the group or area at risk and what the symptoms and signs of the disease are. Look out for information concerning the availability of medication or vaccinations, how to obtain them and who should receive them. Also, find out where to seek medical attention should you need to do so.
